Photoshop CCEarly Goal Directed Therapy after Ischemic Stroke: A Randomized Trial of the Marshall Stroke Scale. To evaluate whether early use of the Marshall Stroke Scale, a stroke score designed to capture both overall neurologic status and comorbidity, will improve patient outcomes in acute ischemic stroke. To compare the effectiveness of the more detailed stroke scale, the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale, with the Marshall Stroke Scale, we conducted a randomized controlled trial in which 300 ischemic stroke patients were randomized to either a stroke scale-based treatment approach or a National Institute of Health Stroke Scale-based approach. The primary outcome was a shift toward a favorable neurologic outcome at 3 months, assessed on the modified Rankin Scale. Secondary outcomes included the proportion of patients achieving an improvement of 2 points or more in the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale score (tertiary outcome) and a safety evaluation (death, life-threatening adverse events, and symptomatic intracranial hemorrhage). Adverse events were more frequent in the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale-based treatment group (13% vs. 4%, $P = 0.01$). The adjusted 3-month neurologic outcome favored the use of the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale (odds ratio, 1.71; 95% confidence interval, 1.04 to 2.81; $P = 0.04$). The change in National Institute of Health Stroke Scale score (adjusted mean difference, 2.5; 95% confidence interval, 0.8 to 4.1; $P = 0.006$) and the proportion of patients who improved by 2 points or more in the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale score (relative risk, 3.4; 95% confidence interval, 1.5 to 7.8; $P = 0.003$) also favored the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale-based treatment. The use of the National Institute of Health Stroke Scale-based treatment strategy resulted in higher rates of major bleeding and a trend toward a lower rate of favorable neurologic outcome. The Marshall Stroke Scale has the potential to improve quality of care and health outcomes in ischemic stroke patients. Unique identifier: NCT01926846.Civics lessons and chocolate C
